

Contributors

Sean P. Alvarez is an undergraduate economics major at Troy University.

Peter Boettke is vice president and director of the F. A. Hayek Program for Advanced Study in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics at the Mercatus Center. He is also the BB&T Professor for the Study of Capitalism and University Professor of Economics and Philosophy at George Mason University. He specializes in Austrian economics, economic history, institutional analysis, public choice, and social change.

Victor V. Claar (PhD, West Virginia University) is associate professor of economics at Florida Gulf Coast University in Fort Myers, where he holds the BB&T Distinguished Professorship in Free Enterprise. He is an Acton Institute Affiliate Scholar in Economics and a member of the Foundation for Economic Education's Faculty Network. A former Fulbright Scholar, Professor Claar is co-author (with Robin Klay) of Economics in Christian Perspective: Theory, Policy, and Life Choices, published by IVP Academic. With co-author Greg Forster, he is completing The Keynesian Revolution and the Rise of Economic Materialism: We're All Dead, which is scheduled to be published by Palgrave Macmillan in early 2019.

Ross B. Emmett is professor of political economy and political theory & constitutional democracy at the James Madison College at Michigan State University. He is also director of the Smith–Tocqueville Center for Studies in Political Economy.

Contributors

Brian Fikkert is professor of economics and community development and founder and president of the Chalmers Center for Economic Development at Covenant College.

Greg Forster (PhD, Yale University) is director of the Oikonomia Network and visiting assistant professor of faith and culture at Trinity International University.

Samuel Gregg (PhD, Oxford University) is director of research at the Acton Institute for the Study of Religion & Liberty.

Sean J. Hernandez is an economist with interests in environmental topics such as climate change and the history of the environmental movement. As an Institute for Humane Studies fellow, he studied how fear is used to produce green behavior. His professional expertise is in antitrust litigation and the electric power industry.

John Lunn is Robert W. Haack Professor of Economics at Hope College.

Phillip W. Magness is a historian, specializing in economic history in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. He is currently a senior scholar at FreedomTrust and an adjunct professor of public policy at George Mason University.

Steven McMullen is associate professor of economics in the Department of Economics & Business at Hope College.

Hadley T. Mitchell (PhD, University of Tennessee; MBA, University of Colorado; MA in Religion, Westminster Theological Seminary; MA in Philosophy, Villanova University) is a professor of economics at Taylor University, where he has taught for twenty-five years. He currently lives in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Patrick Newman is assistant professor of economics at Florida Southern College. His research interests include Austrian economics and late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century United States' economic history.

Edd Noell (PhD, Louisiana State University) is professor of economics at Westmont College. He is the author of Reckoning with Markets: Moral Reflection in Economics (with James Halteman; Oxford, 2012) and Economic Growth: Unleashing the Potential of Human Flourishing (with Stephen L. S. Smith and Bruce Webb; AEI, 2013). His research in the history of economic thought has appeared in the History of Political Economy, the Journal of the History of Economic Thought, Research in the History of Economic Thought and Methodology, and The Oxford Handbook on Christianity and Economics.

Michael Rhodes is a PhD candidate at Trinity College; Bristol, UK, and director of community development and Instructor at the Memphis Center for Urban Theological Studies at Lancaster Bible College.

Daniel J. Smith (PhD in Economics, George Mason University) is associate professor of economics at Troy University and the associate director of the Manuel H. Johnson Center for Political Economy.

Todd P. Steen is Granger Professor of Economics in the Department of Economics & Business at Hope College.

Robert C. Tatum is associate professor of economics at the University of North Carolina, Asheville.