

Contributors

Christopher Chan (PhD, Murdoch University) is an associate professor of management at York University. He has taught organizational behavior, human resource management, international human resource management, international management, strategic management, cross-cultural management, Asian business, business research methods, entrepreneurship, and introduction to management in Australia and Singapore. He has published in the areas of organizational learning, cross-cultural management, health care management, and work-life balance.

Paolo Fragomeni (PhD, York University) is associated with the School of Human Resource Management at York University.

Rachel Behr LaRose (PhD, George Mason University) is a teaching professor of economics at Xavier University. Her research focuses on political economy, economic sociology, Austrian economics, and applied microeconomics, particularly as it relates to markets and morality and the COVID-19 pandemic.

Giovanni Patriarca (PhD, Pontifical University Regina Apostolorum) studied political science at the University of Camerino, Italy, and philosophy at the Pontifical Lateran University, Vatican City. He earned a diploma in Islamic studies at the Pontifical Institute for Arabic and Islamic Studies (PISAI), an MA in school management from the University of Macerata, Italy, and a PhD in philosophy at the Pontifical University Regina Apostolorum in Rome. He was a visiting scholar at Humboldt University in Berlin and undertook research and studies in a number of different academic institutions in France, Hungary, Slovakia, Poland, the Czech Republic, and Greece. He was the recipient of the Acton Institute's 2012 Novak Award.

Contributors

Ben Peterson (PhD, Texas A&M University) is assistant professor of political science at Abilene Christian University. He writes about constitutional theory, attending to the institutional implications of differing philosophical and religious foundations. He teaches courses on American government and politics, political science methodology, and political theory.

Christopher M. Russo (MA, University of Chicago) is Republican Chief Economist for the U.S. Congress Joint Economic Committee, and a doctoral student at George Mason University. His research focuses on monetary economics and economic history.

Virgil Henry Storr (PhD, George Mason University) is vice president of academic and student programs at the Mercatus Center, a professor of economics in the department of economics, George Mason University and the Don C. Lavoie Senior Fellow in the F. A. Hayek Program in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics at the Mercatus Center, George Mason University. His research focuses on the social and moral aspects of markets, the challenges of community recovery after disasters, how culture affects economic activity, and the social and economic history of the Bahamas.