

Contributors

Donald P. Condit (M.D., MBA) is an orthopaedic surgeon specializing in hand surgery in Grand Rapids, Michigan. He attended the University of Michigan Medical School after graduating from the University of Notre Dame in 1980. His emphasis of study in the Seidman School of Business at Grand Valley State University was economics and ethical allocation of scarce health care resources. With his family, he volunteers annually with Helping Hands Medical Missions in El Salvador, and he serves as a Team Physician at Catholic Central High School. Dr. Condit is a Clinical Associate Professor of Surgery at Michigan State University.

Wim Decock graduated as a classicist at the Catholic University of Leuven with a master's thesis on Lessius' views of just pricing and the market. As a Marie Curie Fellow, he is currently staying at different research institutes across Europe to prepare a Ph.D. on the synthesis of law, ethics, and economics in early modern scholasticism.

Mary Ann Glendon is the Learned Hand professor of law at Harvard Law School. Much of her research for the past few years has been in the human rights area, as well as much of her pro bono work, especially that which consists of representing the Holy See at United Nations meetings dealing with poverty, development, and women's issues. Most of Mary Ann's research has been in the fields of comparative and international law, yielding several books and articles including her coursebook and Nutshell on Comparative Legal Traditions (co-authored with Gordon and Carozza), and her history of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, A World Made New: Eleanor Roosevelt and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. She has served as president of the International Association of Legal Science (UNESCO sponsored), and currently serves as president of a multinational think tank based in Rome, the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences.

Pamela Z. Jackson is professor of accounting at Augusta State University. She has a Ph.D. and is a certified public accountant.

Jonathan E. Leightner is associate professor of economics at Augusta State University. He is an Asian specialist who has publications on technology transfer to Japan, income distribution to South Korea, and pollution abatement in Thailand. His most recent research focuses on the causes and consequences of Asia's financial crisis. His current project utilizes a new technique that eliminates the influence of unknown, unmeasurable, and omitted variables to estimate the effectiveness of monetary policy under fixed and flexible exchange rate regimes.

John Meadowcroft is lecturer in public policy at King's College London. Before joining King's he was deputy editorial director at the Institute of Economic Affairs and lecturer in parliament and politics on the Hansard Scholars Programme at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He also lectured in politics at Queen Mary, University of London. His research interests are in political philosophy (particularly liberalism, libertarianism, and the ethics of the market) and political economy (particularly Austrian economics and institutional public choice theory). He is deputy editor and book review editor of the journal Economic Affairs, series editor of a twenty-volume collection, Major Conservative and Libertarian Thinkers, to be published by Continuum in 2009 and 2010, a member of the editorial advisory board of the Routledge series Annals of Bioethics, and a member of the advisory board of the Swedish think tank Captus.

Edward J. O'Boyle is senior research associate at the Mayo Research Institute. The Institute is a nonprofit organization specializing in economic research that proceeds from the premise that the basic unit of economic analysis is not the individual of neoclassical economics, which is grounded in the philosophy of individualism and originated in the seventeenth-eighteenth century Enlightenment toward the end of the script stage of human communication. Rather economic analysis should center on the human person of personalist economics, which is informed by the philosophy of personalism that emerged at the beginning of the electronic stage of human communication. His work has appeared in such publications as the Review of Social Economy, Journal of Markets and Morality, Forum for Social Economics, Ethics and Information Technology, and the International Journal of Social Economics.

John R. Schneider is the author of Godly Materialism: Rethinking Money and Possessions (IVP, 1994), and The Good of Affluence: Seeking God in a Culture of Wealth (Eerdmans, 2002). He has also written a variety of articles and essays on the subject of Christian theology and modern economic life. He teaches systematic theology at Calvin College.