

---

Contributors

Robert A. Black is professor of economics and statistics at Houghton College in western New York. He has published articles in the History of Political Economy, Journal of Economic History, Business Ethics Quarterly, and elsewhere, and recently authored a survey of economics textbook, Economy and Economic Analysis (Triangle Publishing, 2004).

Victor V. Claar is associate professor of economics at Hope College in Holland, Michigan, and an adjunct scholar at the Mackinac Center for Public Policy in Midland, Michigan. He holds a B.A. in business administration from Houghton College, where he also completed a major in mathematics. He earned his Ph.D. in economics from West Virginia University. His areas of research include the macroeconomic implications of behavioral economics, time series econometrics, and forgiveness. His research has appeared in journals such as Applied Economics and Public Finance Review, and he is the coauthor of a forthcoming book from IVP Academic.

John Forren is assistant professor of political science at Miami University (Ohio). Forren earned political science degrees from the University of Chicago (B.A.) and John Hopkins University (Ph.D.). His most recent publication, In Smith's Wake: Law, Religion, and the Politics of Constitutional Change, will be published by Baylor University Press in late 2006.

Alexei M. Marcoux is assistant professor of business ethics in the Graduate School of Business, Loyola University Chicago. Holding two degrees (Ph.D., M.A.) from Bowling Green State University's applied ethics-focused philosophy program, his research interests include the moral foundations of commercial transactions and normative issues in corporate governance. His work has appeared previously in Business & Professional Ethics Journal, Business Ethics Quarterly, Cato Policy Report, and Journal of Business Ethics.

Contributors

Robert I. Mochrie is a lecturer in economics at Heriot-Watt University, Edinburgh. His current research interests concern rural business development in the United Kingdom, in particular the effect of ICT and interregional migration of business owners; and the economic analysis of the Church in Scotland. He is beginning work on a project analyzing the effect of varying competition in local religious markets in nineteenth-century Scotland, and the implications for the role of the church in society.

Glenn Moots is associate professor of philosophy and economics at Northwood University in Midland, Michigan. His research addresses liberalism's interdisciplinary relationships, particularly the intersection of liberal traditions with Christianity.

Gerson Moreno-Riaño is associate professor of political science and chair, Department of Political Science, School of Undergraduate Studies, Regent University. During 2005–2006, he was an academic fellow at the Foundation for the Defense of Democracies (Washington, D.C.) and fellow at the Center for Political Studies (Cedarville University). His most recent publications include Tolerance in the 21st Century: Prospects and Challenges (Lexington Books, 2006) and The World of Marsilius of Padua (Brepols, 2006).

John N. Oswalt is research professor of Old Testament at Wesley Biblical Seminary in Jackson, Mississippi. His past positions include professor of old testament and semitic languages at Asbury Theological Seminary in Wilmore, Kentucky (1989–1999, 1970–1982), and president of Asbury College (1983–1986). He holds degrees from Taylor University, Asbury Theological Seminary, and Brandeis University, where he earned the Ph.D. in Mediterranean studies. He has written six books, including a two-volume commentary on Isaiah in the New International Commentary on the Old Testament series, and his other writings have appeared in Bible encyclopedias, scholarly journals, and popular religious periodicals. Dr. Oswalt was a member of the New International Version translation team, and is currently one of a six-member editorial team that has revised the Living Bible (New Living Translation, 1996).

Krista Rush Sisterhen is the director of the State of Ohio Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives. She previously served as a social policy advisor to Mayor Stephen Goldsmith of Indianapolis. She holds degrees from the University of Kansas (B.A.) and the University of Washington (M.S.W.).

Ryan Stalker (B.A., Political Science, Cedarville University). Mr. Stalker was the managing editor for Cedars, Cedarville University's student newspaper and a research intern for the Center for Political Studies at Cedarville University.

---

Contributors

Richard Teather is senior lecturer in tax law at Bournemouth University, England, and also a private tax policy consultant. A qualified chartered accountant, he has acted as a tax adviser to both international business and individual clients; he now lectures and writes internationally on tax matters. He is a practicing Christian whose faith informs his attitude to tax matters, both in terms of policy and advisory work. He can be contacted at the university or via his Web site (www.teather.me.uk).

Timothy D. Terrell is associate professor of economics at Wofford College in Spartanburg, South Carolina. He completed his doctorate at Auburn University in 1998 and his research interests include environmental economics and economic ethics.

Stephen Veltri is professor of law at Ohio Northern University, Pettit College of Law. Veltri has held the Ella and Ernest Fisher Chair in law at Ohio Northern University. He earned his B.A. in philosophy and history from the University of Pittsburgh, his J.D. from Georgetown University School of Law, and his LL.M. from Columbia University. Veltri practiced law in Pittsburgh, where he represented several churches.