
Contributors

Thomas C. Behr completed the Ph.D. in history at S.U.N.Y. Buffalo in September 2000. He taught for several years as an adjunct around Western New York State, where he is also admitted to the practice of law. He is currently lecturing at the University of Houston in its Honors College “great books” program and the department of history, and revising his dissertation on Taparelli for publication.

Philip Bess is a Principal with Thursday Architects in Chicago, member of the Congress for the New Urbanism, and a professor of architecture at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Michigan. He has a bachelor’s degree in philosophy, a master’s degree in church history from Harvard Divinity School and a master’s in architecture from the University of Virginia’s School of Architecture. In 2001 he led a summer seminar at Calvin College on the New Urbanism under the aegis of the Calvin Center for Christian Scholarship.

Charles C. Bohl is research associate professor and director of the Knight Program in Community Building, a unique interdisciplinary program including fellowships, scholarships, symposia, and charrettes based at the University of Miami’s School of Architecture in Coral Gables, Florida. His book—Place Making: Developing Town Centers, Main Streets, and Urban Villages—was published by the Urban Land Institute in October 2002.

Kelly James Clark is professor of philosophy at Calvin College and the author of many books including The Story of Ethics: Fulfilling Our Human Nature (Prentice-Hall, 2002), his most recent publication.

Lorna Gold was recently appointed as policy analyst for Trociare, the National Catholic Development Agency in Ireland, researching political responses to the inequalities of globalization, particularly in the area of global economic governance. In this capacity, she is also editor of the Trocaire Development Review. She has published widely on the Focolare Movement's Economy of Communion, and has a forthcoming book on the topic—Beyond Economic Darwinism—to be published by Ashgate.

Contributors

Eric O. Jacobsen is associate pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Missoula, Montana. He is a member of the Congress for the New Urbanism and the author of Sidewalks in the Kingdom: New Urbanism and the Christian Faith (Brazos Press, 2003).

Robin Klay is professor of economics at Hope College in Holland, Michigan, and an active member in the Association of Christian Economists.

Jan Klos studied philosophy and English at the Catholic University of Lublin, Poland; wrote his master's thesis on the concept of freedom in Graham Greene's novels and his doctoral thesis on the philosophy of John Henry Newman. He is currently lecturing in political philosophy at the Catholic University of Lublin and working on his habilitation on classical liberal political thought in the nineteenth century.

John Lunn is the Robert W. Haack professor of economics and chair of the department of economics, management, and accounting at Hope College in Holland, Michigan. He is an active member in the Association of Christian Economists.

Mark Pennington is lecturer in public policy in the department of politics, Queen Mary College, University of London. He has published widely on the political economy of land use and environmental policy, including two recent books: Planning and the Political Market: Public Choice and the Politics of Government Failure (Athlone/Continuum, 2000) and Liberating the Land: The Case for Private Land Use Planning (Institute of Economic Affairs, 2002).

Marcelo Sánchez Sorondo is president of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences and of the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences. He is also professor of the history of philosophy at Libera Università Maria SS. Assunta in Rome. Pope John Paul II ordained him Bishop in March 2001.

Kyle Swan is visiting assistant professor of philosophy in the department of philosophy and religious studies at the College of Charleston in South Carolina. He specializes in ethical and political theory. A recent essay has appeared in Pacific Philosophical Quarterly and one is forthcoming in Philosophia Christi.

Jesús Zaratiegui is professor of the history of economic thought at the University of Navarre in Pamplona, Spain. He has been a visiting research associate at Cambridge University, London School of Economics, and George Mason University. The role of entrepreneurs in Alfred Marshall's economic theory is the main theme of his two books: Caballeros y empresarios (Rialp, 1996) and Marshall y la teoría económica del empresario (Publicauva, 2001).