

Contributors

Marc Baer received his PhD in history at the University of Iowa in 1976. He is currently professor of history and chair of the Department of History at Hope College. He is the author of two books: Theatre and Disorder in Late Georgian London published by Oxford University Press in 1992 and The Rise and Fall of Radical Westminster, 1780–1890 published by Palgrave Macmillan in 2012.

Clive Beed and Cara Beed are, respectively, retired senior lecturer in economics at the University of Melbourne and retired lecturer in sociology at Australian Catholic University. They have published in a variety of academic journals on the relationship between theology and economics and in 1997 were awarded a Templeton Prize. A number of their papers were consolidated into a book titled Alternatives to Economics: Christian Socio-Economic Perspectives and published in 2006 by the University Press of America. Married since 1961, they have two married children and two grandsons and enjoy a rich family life and church worship. Currently, they are fellows at the Centre for Applied Christian Ethics, Ridley Theological College, University of Melbourne, and fellows at the Australian Catholic University. Cara is also involved in the Boston-based Theology of Work project.

Daniel K. Finn earned his PhD at the University of Chicago and is now professor of theology and Clemens Professor of Economics and the Liberal Arts at, St. John's School of Theology in Collegeville, Minnesota.

Matthew T. Gaetano is an assistant professor of history at Hillsdale College and a PhD candidate at the University of Pennsylvania. His research deals with Italian and Spanish universities, scholastic theology and philosophy, the mendicant orders, and religious controversy from the fifteenth to the seventeenth centuries. Additionally, he has a forthcoming publication in Archa Verbi on justification by faith alone in Domingo de Soto's commentary on Romans.

Joost W. Hengstmengel, with two earned master's degrees, is a PhD candidate in the Department of Philosophy at Erasmus University in Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He is also a member of the Erasmus Institute for Philosophy and Economics (EIPE). His dissertation examines the role of providentialism in early modern economic thought in Western Europe.

Ryan Langrill is a fourth-year PhD candidate in the Department of Economics at George Mason University, and a PhD fellow at the Mercatus Center at George Mason University. He earned his undergraduate degree in economics and history from Gonzaga University and his master of arts in economics from George Mason University.

Jude Chua Soo Meng holds a PhD and several fellowships and is currently associate professor of philosophy at Policy and Leadership Studies, National Institute of Education, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. He was visiting academic at the Institute of Education, London and visiting research scholar at Blackfriars Hall, Oxford University. His interest is in Aquinas and his relevance for educational and economic thinking. He won the prestigious Novak Award in 2003.

Antonio Pancorbo holds a PhD in economics from Universidad Rey Juan Carlos, Madrid, Spain. Currently he works at the International Monetary Fund as a senior financial sector expert, which he joined from the Bank of Spain. He also worked for the Bank for International Settlements in Basel, Switzerland. He is a member of AEDOS (Asociación para el Estudio de la Doctrina Social de la Iglesia, Spain) and a lecturer at the IE Business School, also in Madrid, Spain.

William Pannacker is an associate professor of English and director of the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation Scholars Program in the Arts and Humanities at Hope College. He holds a PhD in the history of American civilization from Harvard University, and he is the author of Revised Lives: Walt Whitman and Nineteenth-Century Authorship. He has been a contributor to The New York Times and Slate Magazine as well as a columnist for The Chronicle of Higher Education since 1998.

Virgil Henry Storr is a senior research fellow and the director of Graduate Student Programs at the Mercatus Center, George Mason University. He is also a research associate professor of economics in the Department of Economics and the Don C. Lavoie Research Fellow in the F. A. Hayek Program in Philosophy, Politics and Economics at George Mason University.

Clifford F. Thies is the Eldon R. Lindsay Chair of Free Enterprise at Shenandoah University in Winchester, Virginia, where he currently serves as president of the Faculty Senate.